Demonstration – Turning a Peppermill

By Kent Townsend

Kent started with a 10 ¾" blank for a finished 10" peppermill. He did most of his shaping with the roughing gouge. He recommended that if you are making sets to not be too ornate, it can be difficult to make exact copies. He explained that the length wasn't critical, the square shaft is aluminum and can be easily cut to length. Once cut, clamp in a vice and mushroom the cut end with a hammer to keep it from sliding through the grinder. The mill bottom is bored through 1 1/16". This requires a Forstner bit with extension. Kent used wood cones to hold pieces between centers for final shaping and finishing after drilling.
